Ex-Senator George E. Spencer was brought before the District criminal court, on the 26th inst., to answer for contempt in having failed to obey the subporns of the court, issued June 12, 1882, at which time he was wanted as a witness in the star-route cases. Ex-Secretary Boutwell, counsel for the defendant, moved that the case be dismissed upon several grounds, one of which was want of jurisdiction. After hearing argument the court overruled the motion, the defendant being accorded the privilege of parging himself of contempt by affidavit, and required to give bonds in the sum of $2,500 for his appearance. Mr. Spencer gave the required bond, with Mr. Augustus D. Grummond as surety.

The President on the 23d just, appointed Surgeon Robert Murray, new on duty in New York as the chief medical officer at Major-General Hancock's headquarters, to be Surgeon-General of the Army, vice Gen. Charles H. Crane, deceased.

According to the annual report of the board of commissioners of the Washington Soldiers' Home the sum of $1,500,000 will be due that inare completed.

CRIMES AND CASUALTIES.

Mr. King and wife were found murdered on the 23d inst. near Hickman, Ky. No one had seen them alive since Tuesday of last week. Arthur King, when he discovered the bodies of his parents, found evidences of a severe stroggie. The furniture was strewn about. A gun with a broken breech was on the floor. Mrs. King's throat was cut, and there were crushed by a blow. The trunk in which Mr. King kept his money had been chopped open with a hatchet. The only clue is that a spare bed had been used by one person, and the fact that one visitor bad eaten with the aged couple. This points suspicion toward a clock-mender, who was seen near the King home. Henry Miller, the supposed murderer, has been araccomplice.

Jacob D. Cronch, aged seventy-four, a widower; Henry White, aged thirty-eight, son-in-law of Mr. Crouch; Mrs. Eunice White, aged thirtythree, daughter of Mr. Crouch, all of Summit. Mich., and Moses Polley, aged twenty-six, of Transfer, Pa., were found murdered in their beds, all having been shot through the head, just behind the ear, on the morning of the 22d inst. It is supposed they had been chloreformed first. Mr. Crouch was a farmer, worth $2,000,000, living seven miles from Jackson, and owner of an extensive sheep ranche in Texas. It is ramored that he had just received about $50,000 from Texas. Mr. Policy was stopping at Mr. Crouch's place, having just come from Texas with a large amount of money thing of value was carried away.

The jury in the suit of Mary O'Conner against Sam'l G. Keeley, a Mannayunk (Pa.) manufacturer, to recover damages for personal injuries, on the 23d inst. rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $10,000. The girl was employed at defendant's mill, and when a fire broke out, in December, 1882, she was compelled, in the absence of a fire escape, to jump from a window in an upper story to save her life. Her injuries were of such a serious character as to disable her for life. The board of fire-escapes had notified the owner of the building to erect an escape, but he had failed to do so.

EVACUATION DAY.

Organizations. The celebration, on the 26th inst., of the evacuation of New York by the British forces stitution when the settlements for the past year on Nov. 25, 1783, was a success in spite of the rain which fell during nearly the entire day. It is estimated that 40,000 men marched in the parade, through Fifth avenue and Broadway, and the sidewalks were crowded with eager lookers-on. The procession, which was led by carriages containing President Arthur and several members of his Cabinet and the governors of New York, Massachusetts and other States, was six miles in length and took three hours to pass a given point. The second division was composed of State militia organizations, evidences that she had received three heavy and the third of veterans, led by the Old blows on the head. Mr. King's head was Guards and the Ancient and Honorable Artillery of Boston.

THE GRAND ARMY.

Sedgwick Post of the Grand Army was led by that the table had been laid for three shows a little girl, who, in her zouave cap, with her gested the picture of Red Riding Hood. She trudged smilingly through the mud, and by and by, when she was quite wet through rested, and a man named Rosenstein as his accepted a gallant veteran's cape and buttoned it round her little neck. Dakin Post, No. 206. had the best drum corps. A file of boy On Thursday morning four persons, namely, fifers, with their necks done up in handkerchiefs, played "Wait Till the Clouds Roll By" in a manner as charming as the choice of tunes was appropriate. Gen. Franz Sigel strode along as a private in the ranks of one Post. During a halt the remnant of Hawkin's Zouaves sang "Shouting the Battle Cry of Freedom." The picturesque white, yellow, and blue of Duryea's Zouaves was a striking feature, as was also "Black Jack," the veteran army horse, wounded at Gaines' Mill, but showing no signs of age or injury as he was led, garlanded, among the men.

Forty Posts from different parts of New York State were in line, making a finer Grand Army display than has ever been witnessed in that city. Triple Murder in New Hampshire. Thomas Samon, an Englishman about thirtysix years of age, residing at Laconia, N. H. has been arrested for the murder of James Buddy, his child, Mrs. Ford, and the attempted murder of the former's wife, who will probably die. Samon boarded with the Ford family at Laconia, but left there on Saturday last, wheeling his trunk to Lake Village, intending to board at Ruddy's house. The morning after taking up his residence there a fire broke out, and neighbors, rushing to the scene, found Mrs. Ruddy lying en the ground under a front window alive, but fearfully cut and bruised. The flames were quickly extinguished, and, on examining the premises, the bodies of Ruddy and his son were found horribly mutilated. In a bedroom was found Samon's trunk, which he Pacific Railroad was robbed by cowboys on the | had brought there the day before, containing 24th inst. at Gage Station, near Cummings, the lifeless body of Mrs. Ford, one limb having Arizona. The robbers wrecked the train by been chopped off, the detached member being spreading the rails. They then fired their re- tied to the body with a clothesline. At the coroner's inquest the physician testified that Mrs. Ford must have come to her death by a heavy body falling upon her. Samon was followed by dogs Saturday as he was wheeling the trunk containing Mrs. Ford's remains through the street. He was obliged several times to stop and drive them away. Spots of blood found in Samon's room indicate that Mrs. Ford was murdered there. No motive has yet been found for the crime.

Sergeant Mason Pardoned. President Arthur, on the afternoon of the 24th inst., issued a pardon to Sergeant Mason, serving a sentence of eight years in the Albany Dr. John G. A Maine Veteran on Baton Rouge. To the Edier NATIONAL TRIBUNE:

In your issue of August 30th I saw an inquiry from "Exlex" as to where the vets were who fought at Baton Rouge. I will say that there's some of them yet alive and still growing old, but have a fair share of memory left. I, like Comrade Gray, of the 21st Indiana, whose letter you published in your issue of Our regiment was camped out in the edge of the town, so we received the onslaught of the rebel force, which caused us to retire to the rear of our camp, and the rebs then burned our tents. We were just getting our breakfast when we heard orders to fall in, and I put my beans in the tent and fell in without breakfast, and did not get any until we turned out the State prisoners from the Louisiana penitentiary; they fed us. I remember that company I, of our regiment, had not opened their bean hole before we were at it hot and heavy, and they went out to the old camp ground the next afternoon and dug up their beans and took them down to the arsenal for supper. Comrade Gray says he don't recollect what other troops took part in that affair. There were seven regiments, three battalions, one company of cavalry (Mc-Gee's) in town, and thirty-nine companies of infantry, three battalions and a company of cavalry, did the fighting, namely: the 21st Indiana, 6th Michigan, 30th Massachusetts, and nine companies of the 14th Maine. Company H, of the latter, was up the river, above the arsenal, on picket. The 4th Wisconsin and 9th Connecticut were on the reserve. The 7th Vermont was ordered to support the 21st Indiana, but instead of that fired into them, killing fifteen and wounding twenty-eight, and then retired to the river. Their colonel, in trying to rally them, was killed. Four of my company found the colors of the 7th Vermont hid under a house and turned them over to Colonel Paine, of the 4th Wisconsin, who sent them to General Butler at New Orleans. He kept them till they went to Pensacola the following September, 1862. I would like to hear from some comrades in regard to that affair through THE TRIBUNE. And to THE TRIBUNE and Comrade Gray I send greeting. Yours, in F., C. and L., C. H. CHASE,

HEADQUARTERS, DEPARTMENT OF THE GULF. General Orders, No. 93. The commanding-general, upon the finding of Baton Rouge, learns that he was led into a mistake by the official reports of that action as to the loss by that regiment of its colors; it proving to have been the camp color left in camp, and not the regimental color, that was brought off the field by the Massachusetts battery. He, therefore, has pleasure in ordering the regimental colors to be restored to the regiment, not doubting that it will in its next action earn for itself a position and name which will be a credit to itself, its State, and country.

The heroine of the story is Miss Cordelia Hericourt, who is made the victim of an infamous scheme on the part of a cousin and aunt to wrest from her the fortune which she has unexpectedly inherited through her French connections, and the story exhibits to an unbrake, to prevent the recoil of artillery; a usual extent the workings of the most ignoble passions of the human heart-avarice and envy. The young girl, discovering too late the character of the conspiracy against her, in vain seeks, through the courts, to establish her right to the estate of which she has been unlawfully dispossessed, and she is on the point of returning to her early convent life when fate brings her face to face again with her lover-a priest who has twice offered, out of his desperate love for her, to renounce his vows, and as often been denied-and she finds happiness at last in his affection. The plot, as we have said, is out of all reason, and it is calculated to excite surprise that a writer of such evident ability and such elegant and charming style should have made such an ill choice of a vehicle for the delineation of her characters. The book is for sale in this city by A. Brentano & Co.

From Dodd, Meade & Co., New York, we series of youthful indiscretions, but a step re- Carolina reg his friends when he has become entirely master of himself. This is a book which every young and is plainly inspired by a noble purpose. The story in itself is extremely interesting, clearer idea of the perils and temptations fluences, as well as protecting it with wholesome safeguards. From J. P. Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia, we have a translation in English line and blank verse of the Odes of Horace, by Heury Hubbard Pierce, adjutant of the 21st infantry, U. S. A., and the author of a most admirable translation of Virgil's Aneid. Mr. Pierce is one of the few officers of our Regular Army who has found time, in the midst of the engressing duties of his profession, to pursue his literary studies, and this little work shows him to be not only a most accomplished and conscientious scholar, but a poet of lively fancy and unusual metrical skill. In his translations of the Odes, he has in no case departed from the exact meaning of the text, but has endeavored rather to reproduce the spirit and the melody than the mere form and meaning of the original. He gives us in flowing metres all the beauties of versification that distinguished the verse of the Roman bard and reproduces in the idioms of our own tongue all the beautiful ideas and forms of expression which have endeared old Horace to the lovers of the classics. Among the especially happy examples of his skill and beauty of translation are his rendering of the ode "To Lydia" -Parcius Junctas-and that "To Torquatus"-Diffugere Nives. We quote a few verses from

The knock repeated by the wanton swain Less rudely shakes thy bolted lattice now. No eager tapping at the window pane Doth banish slumber from thy faded brow.

Thy chamber door that once too freely swung Now hugs the theshold, seldom yields again; And less and less these tender words are sung Beneath the moonlight by the suitor train:

'Ah! cruel maiden, while thy lover pines, Doth quiet slumber seal those radiant eyes The livelong night, until the mountain shines With borrowed splendor from the eastern skies?" Equally beautiful is the following extract from the ode to Torquatus:

Each day of every hastening year, Each hour of kindly greeting, Reminds us all by omens clear That earthly scenes are fleeting! The cold will yield when zephyrs blow;

Spring moves the summer weather; When autumn comes, the drifting snow Soon veils the flowery heather.

Now covers hill and fallow. The groves rejoice in emerald sheen; Fast blooms the downy mallow. New charms adorn our smiling land; Soft flows the ebbing river; The nymphs and graces hand in hand

Now press the lea together.

Indeed, this is without exception the most spirited, faithful, and truly poetic translation of the Odes that American scholarship has yet as to the 7th Vermont, as the following order produced, and we congratulate Mr. Pierce on the successful issue of his labor. As Prof. Frieze, of the Michigan University, says of this translation of Horace, Mr. Pierce has been fortunate in transfusing into his lines the mind and spirit of the genial bard. We commend dering valuable service." President Lincoln them. Mason's record as a soldier was a good regiment Vermont volunteers at the battle of his work heartily to the attention of all lovers of the classics. The translation is for sale in this city by Wm. H. Morrison.

> From Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston, Mass., we have "Beyond the Gates," the new and much-talked of novel by Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, author of "Dr. Zay," "The Story of Avis," "The Gates Ajar," &c. In some sort, ern Instance," etc.; W. E. Norris, author of this last, strange and fascinating story may be regarded as a sequel to "The Gates Ajar." It embodies, in fact, the author's idea of Heaven. and it is a story-told in the first person-of her own death and resurrection; of the fear and trembling with which her soul escaped from the flesh; of the wonderful delight which filled it when she entered the heavenly city; of the tender ties that she found there still existing between the happy inhabitants and the dear ones still on earth; of the perfect peace which came to those who talked to the Master; of the loving preparations which those who had gone before were permitted to make in anticipation of the coming of beloved companions,-and of how, in a word, life in the Celestial City was but a resumption of the life in this world without any of its cares or anxieties, its brutal passions, its selfish motives, or the fierce contentions incident to our struggle for existence. The author has made a novel and daring venture in thus attempting to materialize the vague future existence, sorrowlesss and full of ecstacy, she has at least given us a book full of ten-der and charming sentiments and the most felicitous language, and, in the highest sense of the word, soulful. Few will be able to read it and restrain their tears, though the story itself is sweet and tranquilizing. From James R. Osgood & Co., Boston, we

OLD GENERAL EARLY.

Some Characteristic Anecdotes of the Irreconcilable Virginian.

[Special Cor. N. Y. Sun.] WACHINGTON, Nov. 24.-Old Jubal Early is a character in Virginia. He is drawn up into a hard knot with rheumatism, and has a face like a hickory-nut. His voice is pitched on a very high key, and he is a compound of shrewdness and sarcasm in equal parts. He was strongly opposed to secession at the beginning have "A Knight of the 19th Century," one of of the war, although he fought valiantly when known as the Pittsburg branch to designate it from the series of fascinating novels by the Rev. fighting was inevitable. The clergyman took for his subject the testimony of the truths of Christianity. After preachinging an hour or two, he asked:

The Ohio Soldiers' Orphans' Home.

The annual report of the superintendent and trustees of the Soldiers and Sailors' Orphans' Home, at Xenia, Ohio, shows that on the 15th inst, 681 children-442 males and 239 females -were in the Home, 135 of whom are full crphans. The whole number cared for during the year was 800, the average age being 11 4-5 years. The number received during the year was 123-92 boys and 31 girls. Since the organization of the Home 2,052 children have been received. During the current year 96 children will arrive at the age of 16 and be discharged. For payment of net earnings, averaging $15, an appropriation of $1,400 is asked. The number of applications on file November 15, 1883, was 253. This is 23 per cent. less than was on file at the close of last year. The decrease may be accounted for by recent payment of pensions, which enables parents to take care of their children. Of the applications on file, 144 are for boys and 109 for girls. Franklin county has 16 applications on file. Carroll and Geauga have no applications.

One hundred children are being cared for at the several county homes, and it is recommended that a further transfer of children to those homes be made as a means of immediate relief. For this purpose an appropriation of $20,000 is asked, which will support about 200 children. The children in county homes are all transferred to the Orphans' Home at the age of 14, in order that they may learn some trade. More shop room is badly needed, and an appropriation of $5,000 is asked for a new industrial building.

The per capita cost for 1882-3 was $145.

Your early reply will greatly oblige, Yours, in F., C., and L., I. S. Banes, Commanding.

General I. S. Bangs, Waterville, Me.

Chief

MY DEAR COMBADE: Yours of the 5th inst, is ust at hand, and I will reply to its inquiries, as

1st. I was a member of the committee on the address of the Commander-in-Chief of the G. A. R. at the annual Encampment held at Denver, Col., last July, and to me was assigned the duty of preparing the report. Attached to the report were several resolutions, one of which commended the organization known as the Sons of Veterans of the United States of America to the confidence and support of all members of the G. A. R. 2d. I cannot recall the exact phraseology of the resolution, but it was unanimously adopted, not only by our committee but by the Encampment. 3d, The resolution was intended to carry out the recommendation of the Commander-in-Chief in regard to the Sons of Veterans. The Commander-in-Chief having invited all organizations of Sons of Veterans to be represented at Denver at that time for the purpose of uniting as one, our committee on two different occasions gave audience to all the representatives of Sons of Veterans known to be present in Denver, and listened carefully to what they had to say. 4th. The representatives of but one branch of the organization accepted the invitation of the Commander-in-Chief and appeared before our committee. They submitted to us a copy of their Constitution which we examined as far as it was neces sary; also, a copy of their ritual, which we did not examine, as we did not think it necessary for the purpose of our appointment. From the constitution we ascertained that the organization represented at our meeting was known by the official title Sons of Veterans of the United States of America. whose Commander-in-Chief, we were informed was Harry Rowley, of Pittsburg. We were further informed that the organization was popularly all others.

5th. The resolution which I prepared and which was unanimously reported by the committee and iment. It was observed that old was intended as far as it was expedient to carry

I desire the words "as far as it was expedient' o be clearly understood. There is an element in the G. A. R. (to which I frankly say I belong), that is opposed to any connection between the G. A. R. sction that might possibly be construed into an inent to recognize such a connection, an element however, perfectly friendly to the Sons of Veterans anxious for their full and entire success. While the resolution was carefully worded to avoid offense to that element, it was intended fully and unreservedly to recognize the Pittsburg branch of the ons of Veterans as worthy the confidence, en puragement, and support of all comrades of the G. A. It, it was not only approved by the committee, but heartily and unqualifiedly approved. Now, my dear comrade, I hope I have as satisfactorily answered your inquiries as I have hon estly answered them. I trust that unity may pre vail in this organization, that our sons may fe the example which their fathers have set before them in the harmony and friendship which char scterize our noble Order, the G. A. R., and that when we are compelled to relinquish the glorious work of Fraternity, Charity, and Loyalty, they may take it up out of our nerveless hands and earry it still forward.

With sentiments of high regard, I remain, yours, F., C., and L., SAMUEL HARPER. The other members of the committee above eferred to were Department Commanders Clark Chio, Valentine of Vermont, Puterbaugh of Ill., Varner of Missouri, now S. V. Commmander-inhief, and Douglas of Utah.

A New Relief Corps in Nebraska.

To the Editor NATIONAL TRIBUNE: On Tuesday evening, November 20th, A. Lincoln Corps, No. 4, Woman's Relief Corps, Auxiliary to A. Lincoln Post, No. 10, Department of Nebraska, G. A. R., was organized at David City with the following officers: President, Mrs. Brad. P. Cook; senior vice-president, Miss E. M. Turner; junior vice-president, Mrs. Adam Hall; secretary, Mrs. E. B. Taylor; treasurer, Mrs. Wm. Bunting; chaplain, Mrs. 'eter Christiancy; conductor, Mrs. L. D. Wilus; guard, Mrs. John King.

The officers were installed by Comrade E. B. Faylor, Chief Mustering Officer, Department of lebraska, G. A. R., assisted by various comades of A. Lincoln Post, No. 10. This Corps as a large and enthusiastic membership, and will accomplish much good work in the near uture. Our Western Posts have not as many ollars in the treasury as the Eastern Posts we read about in your valuable paper, but they have as much of the cardinal virtues of F., C. and L. in their hearts, and it would be hard to find more energy, push, and perseverance in nany of your wealthy Posts with elegant Post rooms than is displayed at the meetings in Nebraska, Kansas, and other Western States in the soil school-house or the uncomfortable town hall or court-room. We lack suitable places of meeting, but the comrades make the best of circumstances, as was customary during the Recruiting is steadily going on, and Commander-in-Chief Beath will feel proud of the gains all along the lines during his administraion. Greeley, in his history of the war, speaking of the behavior of the troops at the battle of The ablest religious and literary newspaper | Winchester, Va., Sept. 19, 1863, says that when | the battle seemed lost beyond all hope and the 156th New York V. I. had barely forty men grouped around its colors, Capt. Rigby, 24th Iowa, was seen retreating firmly, deliberately followed by a sergeaut and twelve men who reaching the assigned milying-point, halted, faced to the front, and gave three hearty cheers. Five minutes later that platoon had been swelled by other such to a battalion. Mr. J. S. Pitman-"Jack" Pitman or "Pit"-was one of the twelve men there especially alluded to, and one of the thousands who went forward to the final success-receiving, just as it was achieved, a fearful wound in the thigh, the ball passing clear through and cracking, though not breaking, the bone. Some weeks afterward, at the Winchester hospital, in the basement of an old church, were "Jack," with many others -including at least one present citizen of this community, Mr. J. D. Dickinson-were lying in pain and feebleness. "Jack" had pulled himself up by the window and was trying, as his custom was, to "chirk up" his comrades a one should at least send 30 cents for a month's little, when an old native appeared on the outside with a quadruped of doubtful descent and an old cart. Jack at once began giving "Old Virginy" taffy about his fine rig, and ran on to natural inquiry in regard to the contents of the cart. Learning that it was peaches, and that they were for sale, with an eager thought of the luxury a treat of them would prove to his fellows and himself, and a disconsolate one of their complete impecuniosity, then so long endured as to have become second nature, he dropped his head-then raising it as quickly said, "See here, Mister, if you will just bring a basket of them down here, us boys'll take 'em." The old man brought down the peaches and assisted Pit to make a distribution, and as the bottom of the basket appeared and all were reveling in the unexpected treat, inquired about his pay. "Pay!" was the ready answer; "Why man, they've quit paying; we have'nt had any pay for fourteen months." Virginia The watch sent on the 15th just, was received in due time, and gives entire satisfaction. It is an was the matter. "Nothing at all, sir." said the ready peach buyer; we lived right up to our bargain with this man. I told him to bring down the penches and we'd take some; and I'll leave it to the boys if we haven't done it." The surgeon scratched his head, and told the citizen he didn't see how he was going to get anything out of that trade but experience.
